

DAILY NEWS

504

www.nydailynews.com

NEW YORK'S HOMETOWN NEWSPAPER

Thursday, May 31, 2001

---

traveler's check

---

We already know that you are what you eat. Now a new study by DiMassimo Brand Advertising suggests that you travel the way you eat.

Results of the "Caloric Traveler Survey" of nearly 1,300 people country-wide revealed that folks with higher calorie diets tend to look for vacation destinations that are comfortable, while their low-cal cousins are more concerned with romance, relaxing and gourmet meals.

Other findings: Lean-cuisiners were five times more likely to travel alone compared to gluttons. What's more, people with high-calorie diets went on vacations that were 50% longer than calorie-watchers. People with high-calorie diets also were more likely to go on all-inclusive vacations or tours. Sounds like the rawboned are more adventurous.